CHURCHILL CEMETERY

DEPARTMENT OF GEOGRAPHY
UNIVERSITY OF WINNIPEG

Foreword

What do seventeen University of Winnipeg students, five faculty and staff, and a cemetery have in common? Geography and a commitment to community based/derived student projects.

During the 2014 offering of the Department of Geography's colloquially title "Churchill Field Course", we undertook our first service-learning project based on a request from community leaders. This project was to produce a map and database of the Churchill Community Cemetery as none existed in a single location. This project, first proposed in 2012, did not get off the ground as bad weather and timing conspired to ensure it did not happen. However, the desire to map the cemetery never left.

Students from the 2012 offering stressed that it needed to be completed. They felt that mapping the cemetery for the town was something of immense value, and something they could easily do. When we brought this idea to the 2014 students who were planning on taking the course, they unanimously agreed that it should be done and that we would set aside an entire day to ensure its successful completion. Over the course of almost 4 hours, five teams of students mapped, photographed and cataloged each burial site within the cemetery. Over the proceeding months and years, the data was compiled with new interments being added. What you have before you represents the burials as of August 2017 as we were able to identify them.

In August 2015, two faculty members returned to Churchill. They spent part of their time mapping the outlying burial sites in, and around the town for inclusion into the database. In addition, a small group of people headed over to the old town site to map the original two cemeteries that still exist on the other side (a special thanks to SeaNorth for shuttling us over). Given these burial sites have been largely left to Mother Nature for almost 70 years; we were unsuccessful in finding them our first time. We have vowed to return and try again!

During our final evening in Churchill, I gave an open presentation on the mapping project at the Overpass to community members in attendance. This event was very well attending with over 40 people showing up. The question and answer period was designed to allow for input from the community but to also better understand how the community would like the final product delivered. Overall, the project was well received and many of the community members expressed their gratitude and conveyed how important this project is to them and their families.

This project has stressed to all those involved the mutual benefits that service learning and community engagement can have. Projects such as this go beyond the learning outcomes associated with a particular course and extend well into the community and beyond. We look forward to engaging the community when we return in the future.

What you have before you is the culmination of numerous people's energy in seeing this project to completion. We want to thank Louise Lawrie for bringing this project to our attention, without her, this never would have been a possibility. I want to thank Brad Russell who did the overall organization and compiling of the data. A huge thanks to Weldon Hiebert who put together the book you have before you. And, lastly, I would also like to thank the 2014 students and faculty who participated in the course. These were the people that did the primary data collection and without whom this project could not have been completed.

Respectfully, Dr. Christopher D Storie Associate Professor, Chair Department of Geography The University of Winnipeg c.storie@uwinnipeg.ca
